

May 5, 2010 by Publisher

Duke City Shootout Gathering Steam The Duke City Shootout returns!

Pack your cameras, rustle up your crews, and get ready to ride on into Albuquerque this July for the world's premiere filmmaking contest.

The intense seven-day filmmaking competition is the signature event that helped MovieMaker Magazine vote Albuquerque as the number one place to shoot an independent film.

This summer the Duke City Shootout will celebrate its 10th anniversary with a new format. Accepting short narrative scripts, we will also be looking for the best music video concepts. The deadline for submissions is May 15th.

On Friday, July 23rd, the Shootout's famed shotgun start will send film crews racing to their locations. One week later, on Saturday night July 31st, the movies will premiere at a gala Award Ceremony held at UNM's Popejoy Hall.

The once obscure, but now coveted, Palm de Grease will be given to the best film. The newly minted, and soon to be sought after, It award will honor the best music video. T his hands-on movie making festival celebrates the inventive nature of independent film at its most resourceful. With union mentored crews, SAG actors, and professional assistance in producing and directing, the Shootout maintains its claim to be the ultimate creative educational experience anyone who wants to work on a movie could have.

For complete information please visit the Duke City Shootout website.